Subject: Critical Appraisal of English Literature (820.9)

Author: JOHN MILTON

Title: PARADISE LOST: Books IX & X

Editor: R.E.C. HOUGHTON, Emeritus Fellow and Tutor of St. Peter's College, Oxford

The Book: Of the twelve books of Paradise Lost, two of the most important are the ninth and tenth, describing the Fall of Man. This study of Books IX and X is intended as an introduction to the books, the work itself, and to Milton. It serves as a sequel to Prince's earlier edition of Books I and II, and like its predecessor, contains the original spelling and punctuation in preference to a modernized text. To explain any difficulties, however, there are glossarial notes at the bottom of each page. This leaves the Commentary free for more general matters. The volume includes a lengthy introduction dealing with the central books of the epic, the Myth of the Fall, Milton's beliefs and their relevance to modern times, and Milton the Poet. There are also two chapters of commentary on Books IX and X. The Select Criticism, the first ever to be included in an edition of separate books of Paradise Lost, includes a wide range of British and American critics. The volume is completed with two appendices dealing with the text and sources.
